Free Range Dog Chews Moving to Greener Pastures

Romeo, MI (January 12, 2010) – In keeping with the Free Range Dog Chew's commitment to market only the finest quality products available, President Ralph Claypool Sr. has announced that due to industry consolidations, the company is moving its beef production from Brazil and its lamb production from the U.S., both to Argentina.

"Argentina offers us the unique opportunity to supply our customers with the world's finest meat products," says Claypool. "Argentine organic beef, mostly from the Aberdeen Angus lineage, is considered some of the healthiest and highest quality and is in demand worldwide." Claypool went on to say that "this is important to Free Range because of the company's belief that 'healthy treats come from healthy cattle.""

Free Range Dog Chews takes pride in making products from grass-fed-only cattle. The products have no added hormones, antibiotics, animal by-products, steroids, or preservatives, and present no risk of "mad cow" disease. The chews are merely dehydrated before packaging, which is a safe and natural process.

While the company has been pleased with the quality of Brazil-sourced meat products in the past, this situation has recently changed. "Three U.S. companies now control the majority of the beef in Brazil and have imported their bigbusiness mentality of 'highest possible production level with least cost'," says Claypool. "Unfortunately, to achieve their goals, they are finding it necessary to begin conforming Brazil's beef industry to U.S. standards, including putting cattle in feed lots; using steroids, hormones, antibiotics, and supplemental by-products (which is illegal in Argentina); and, in some cases, even establishing ranches in the endangered Amazon Rainforest."

"In light of these changes, we have made the decision to move our production operations to Argentina so that we can, with complete confidence, assure our customers that all of our beef and lamb treats are humanely raised in a stress-free environment, with the animals thriving on their native organic diet while they roam free in ecological rotation matrix pastures," asserts Claypool. The company has already opened three plants within a two-hour radius of its raw-material sources, ensuring that all of their products are processed fresh, never frozen. A fourth plant will be online in March 2010.

Free Range Dog Chews Inc. is best known for its Odor-Free Bully Sticks, which will remain the case. In fact, due to the Angus lineage of the cattle, the company will be able to fulfill the overwhelming requests for Supreme/Monster Bully Sticks, as all of the Bully Sticks from Argentina are a larger diameter.

"It has been well worth our investment in time, energy, and financial resources to make this positive move, which has allowed us to maintain our core values, rather than lower our standards," said Claypool. "In this case, the grass is greener on the other side and that's where you'll find us!"
